The similarity between the ballad and Blake's songs extends further. Lyca, lost in a forest, sleeps in a protracted manner that suggests death. Moreover, lions befriend her, and in "Night" lions are shown to be amiable only after death. (The Lyca songs were originally grouped along with "Night" in the Songs of Innocence.) Her transfer to a cave by beasts seems a sort of funeral and recalls the kindness of the ballad's robin. The children in the ballad die of starvation. In "The Little Girl Found," Lyca's searching parents dream she has starved. In the ballad, seven years elapse before their bodies are discovered by humans. This period may have a numerical echo in the seven days that pass before Lyca is found. The seven years of the ballad may also be reflected in the age given to Lyca who, though she is obviously post-pubescent in the illustrations to the songs, is said to be "Seven summers old."

The focus of the relationship between the ballad and Blake's songs is death's double meaning. Blake's illustrations indicate that nubile Lyca's dying is sexual and takes place in her lover's arms. If Blake did have the ballad in mind as he wrote his two songs about Lyca, his sexual theme may have been suggested to him by two lines already quoted from Percy that seem especially charged with sexual connotations: "In one another's arms they dyed, / As wanting due relief."

I deny any responsibility for—or any awareness of, before they were fait accompli—the weird montage on the front cover and the deathly prose on the back ("richly representative . . . extraordinary blending . . . vividly immediate and tantalizingly ambiguous" and so on).

George Frederick Cooke:
Another Grave Subscriber Heard From
By Dennis Read

In Memoirs of George Frederick Cooke, 2 vols., ed. William Dunlap (London: Henry Colburn, 1813), is a reference to Blake which has not been previously noted. Cooke (1756-1811), a well-known actor, was a subscriber to The Grave, and among his diary entries (recorded in his Memoirs, II, 65-70) are several dealing with the arrival of his copy:

Thursday, Jan. 5th [1809]
Received a note from a Mr. Cromek, informing me that a work I subscribed two guineas for, at Liverpool, above two years ago, and which I had entirely forgotten, is published, and requesting my address, that my copy might be sent.

Friday, Jan. 6th
Wrote an answer to Mr. Cromek's note, . . .

Thursday, Jan. 12th.
Received and looked over "Blake's Illustrations of Blair's Poem of The Grave." The etchings seem finely executed, and the printing, the letter press I mean, done in the fine style. Cooke's diary shows that Cromek was in Liverpool for at least part of the time that Cooke was there during the latter part of August and first weeks of September, 1806. Cooke's stay was apparently worthwhile, for the "List of Subscribers" in The Grave includes fifty-one Liverpool residents. Cromek probably had come to Liverpool from Birmingham, where he ran nearly identical advertisements for The Grave in the 28 July 1806 Birmingham Gazette and Commercial Herald; he then left Liverpool probably for his native Yorkshire, where he gathered Grave subscriptions in Halifax, Pontefract, Leeds, and, finally, Wakefield, where he married Mrs. Elizabeth Charge in the parish church on 24 October 1806.

Cooke clearly is no intimate of either Cromek or Blake, and while he does not seem to regard his two guineas as ill-spent, his interest in his new acquisition is less than consuming. One wonders, in fact, if he ever opened his copy of The Grave again.

Errors in the Signet Classic Edition of The Selected Poetry of Blake
by David V. Erdman

In the "Selected Bibliography" on page xvi the Keynes edition of Complete Writings should be said to contain "Modernized punctuation" but not spelling. The Erdman-Stevenson edition of 1971 should be described as containing "Modernized spelling and punctuation."

Page 133, note 16:14 should read: "... the year of this Prophecy (1793) . . . ."

Page 199, note 11:32 should read: "Sin, daughter of Satan and mother of Death."
