Recovering the Lost Moravian History of William Blake’s Family

Keri Davies, Marsha Keith Schuchard

Blake/An Illustrated Quarterly, Volume 38, Issue 1, Summer 2004, pp. 36-43
Recovering the Lost Moravian History of William Blake's Family

BY KERI DAVIES AND MARSHA KEITH SCHUCHARD

ABSTRACT. This paper seeks to amend and extend Keri Davies's essay on Blake's mother published in Blake/An Illustrated Quarterly in 1999.1 There, he established that Blake's mother Catherine's true maiden name was Wright, and that Thomas Armitage, her first husband, was born in Royston, Yorkshire in 1722, the son of Richard Armitage of Cudworth. Davies also produced evidence that contradicted E. P. Thompson's Muggletonian hypothesis, and speculated upon the identity of Blake's maternal grandparents. We now link Blake's mother to a very different religious community, providing further evidence about her first marriage, and correcting the assumptions Davies made in identifying Blake's grandparents. These latest discoveries about Blake's mother disclose her place of birth (Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire), the names of her parents and siblings, and her association with the Moravian sect. Documentary and autographic records in the archive of the distinctive and exceptional eighteenth-century Moravian church, some dating from many years before the poet was born, are a vivid indicator of how much of our thinking about Blake's life and early influences might need to be revised and rewritten in the future.

Biographical discussion of William Blake has long been dominated by unexamined commonplaces regarding his family background, his early religious allegiance, and other aspects of his life and personality. Three persistent topos dominate the nearly two hundred years of biographical writing about Blake. First, present even in Malkin's A Father's Memoirs of His Child, is the question of Blake's sanity (what Malkin calls "the hue and cry of madness").2 Second, there is the belief that Blake had no contemporary audience, and thus we in posterity are Blake's true disciples. And third, the most misleading, because the least examined, the insistence that he came from a radical dissenting family.3

A recent example of the madness topos appeared during the Tate Britain "William Blake" exhibition of 2000-01. Thomas Stuttaford, the Times medical correspondent, devoted his column to a diagnosis of Blake's "schizophrenia." Stuttaford wrote, "although he was obsessively hard-working, Blake was also fascinated by the mystical from an early age, which is another symptom displayed by those suffering from schizophrenia troubles." As long ago as 1925, in his short witty biography of Blake, Harold Bruce commented on the mad-or-not-mad topos:

To say confidently that Blake suffered from mythenia, or from automatism, or from occasional hyper-aesthesia, or from manic-depressive tendencies, or that he did not tend 'towards a definite schizophrenia,' is to add polysyllables rather than illumination to the discussion of his state.4

The second topos is that indicated by Alexander Gilchrist in the subtitle to his biography of 1863: pictor ignotus—the unknown painter—and with it the idea that Blake had no contemporary audience. But there is plentiful evidence of that contemporary audience. In 1794, Joseph Johnson, one of the foremost progressive publishers of the decade, was displaying Blake's books for prospective customers.5 Bentley's Blake Books lists sixty-one persons who bought copies of the illuminated books in Blake's lifetime or shortly after.7 Blair's Grave (1808) with Blake's illustrations had no fewer than 578 subscribers.

The third assumption, the dissenting topos, first appears in Crabb Robinson's essay "William Blake, Künstler, Dichter und religiöser Schärwer" of 1811.8 There Robinson notes that Blake belonged "von Geburt zu einer dissentirenden Gemeinde"—from birth to a dissenting sect. But this was written before Crabb Robinson ever met Blake. In the later account of Blake in Robinson's diary, there is no further indication that he belonged "zu einer dissentirenden Gemeinde." The diary account was written after Robinson had met Blake and become genuinely interested in him; Robinson records his conversations with Blake after they met in 1825 but never again does he call Blake a Dissenter.9

3. The assumption, on next to no evidence, that the Blake family belonged to some group that rejected Anglican teaching, isolated and exclusive, doctrinally eccentric, somewhat like the Muggletonians.

36 Blake/An Illustrated Quarterly Summer 2004
Alexander Gilchrist's Life remains our only source for much of what we know of Blake's biography. Gilchrist worked on his biography in the late 1850s when a number of people who knew Blake were still alive, and it is this first or second-hand information from those who knew Blake in his later years that gives Gilchrist's Life its continuing authority. Gilchrist makes very little use of documentary sources or public records. This means that his biography is weakest for Blake's life before he met Palmer and Linnell, Gilchrist's chief informants, and for any information about his family.

It was not until 1906 that Arthur Symons consulted the parish registers of St. James's Piccadilly to establish the dates of birth of William's brothers and sister. It took until 1947 for H. M. Margoliouth to locate the marriage of James and Catherine, William's parents (James Blake married Catherine "Harmitage" at the Mayfair Chapel, 15 October 1752). Bentley's Blake Records spreads the known information about Blake's life over 418 pages. But the years 1757 to 1800, half of his life, occupy just the first 61 pages. Bentley adds little to Gilchrist, Symons, and Margoliouth about Blake's childhood and parentage.

E. P. Thompson's acclaimed Witness against the Beast is a recent example of the persistence of unexamined and unverified ideas in Blake studies. It became widely accepted that Thompson "offers plausible evidence to suggest that Blake's mother may well have come from a family with Muggletonian connections." In reality, the Muggletonians were a small Protestant sect whose membership is largely identifiable and contains no Blake relatives. Thompson does, however, make the extraordinarily important discovery that Catherine, Blake's mother, was married twice, first to Thomas Armitage (whom Thompson calls "Hermitage") and then to James Blake. This, in turn, led to Keri Davies's discovery of the date of Catherine Blake's first marriage and her true maiden name (Wright). We can now confidently say that Catherine Wright married Thomas Armitage on 14 December 1746, was widowed in 1751, and married James Blake in October 1752.

Davies suggested in 1999 that Blake's mother was the daughter of John and Elizabeth Wright of the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. Assuming Catherine Wright to be a Londoner seemed the simplest explanation, the one that gave the best fit with the known data. He was misled. He had unthinkingly accepted a fourth topos, one given fullest elaboration by Peter Ackroyd: that of Blake the "cockney visionary" whom Davies assumed must have had a cockney mother.

Davies concluded in 1999 by stressing how the surviving evidence not only does not support Thompson's claims of a Muggletonian background to the Blake family, but in fact does not even support the conventional view of the Blakes as Radical Dissenters. The research reported in this present paper is the result of a suggestion made by the nineteenth-century facsimilist William Muir regarding Blake's early religious affiliation, which we felt warranted further investigation.

The nature of Blake's religious background and development has long been insufficiently defined. In 1828 John Thomas Smith reported that William Blake had not attended "any place of Divine Worship" for the last forty years of his life. Nancy Bogen suggests that "it seems reasonable to suppose that he was connected with a religious organization prior to that time, that is, before 1787. Indeed, Blake must have received some sort of religious training as a youth—but of what denomination remains to be seen." The evidence of an Anglican marriage ceremony (though, without reading of banns or bishop's license, it was technically "clandestine"), and baptism of children in the parish church, but later family burials at Bunhill Fields, suggests that the Blake family were originally Anglican, but that later on, after 28 January 1764 when the youngest child of the family (William's sister Catherine) was baptized, they may have become members of some dissenting congregation.

But another way of resolving this problem of Blake's early religion is suggested by an item in his deathbed conversation. It seems that during the course of discussing his last wishes, he had expressed a preference for burial in Bunhill Fields, the Dissenters' burial ground, and Mrs. Blake offered him a choice as to funeral arrangements; that is, "either he would have the Dissenting Minister, or the Clergyman of the Church of England, to read the service." It's as though Catherine, his own wife, did not know where his preferences lay. Blake, in this account, chose the Church of England. The possibil-

---

17. John Thomas Smith, Nollekens and His Times (London: Henry Colburn, 1828). Cited in Bentley, Blake Records 458. Smith (1766-1833) had known the Blake family as a boy and had, according to his own account, been a playfellow of Blake’s younger brother, Robert.
ity then raised by Nancy Bogen is that Blake and his family were Anglicans and at the same time maintained a connection with the Moravian Church.\(^2\) The position of this body in England during the eighteenth century was quite unusual. While it was recognized by an Act of Parliament as an episcopal church and therefore a sister to the Church of England, its members were still required to have their places of worship licensed as Dissenting chapels. In other words, they were not Dissenters. Also, having been more intent on evangelizing than proselytizing, the Moravians encouraged those who joined their congregation not to sever their ties with whatever denomination they had been born into. The Moravians were only too pleased when they could lead their adherents back to the local parish church for the ministration of the vicar.\(^3\) Accordingly, one could be an Anglican and a Moravian at the same time—and it turns out that a majority of the English brethren were and remained loyal members of the Church of England.

This theory of Blake’s Moravian connection was first advanced by Thomas Wright and later enlarged upon by Margaret Ruth Lowery, their informal source of information having been William Muir. It deserves a fair hearing because Muir was explicit; that is, according to him, Blake’s parents “attended the Moravian Chapel in Fetter Lane”—and such a chapel did exist, having been established around 1738. Muir and Wright suggested the influence of Moravian hymns on Blake’s Songs of Innocence and of Experience, while Lowery notes the “striking resemblance” between Blake’s “The Lamb” (E 8-9) and the Moravian James Hutton’s hymn, “O Lamb of God So Mild.”\(^4\)

In 1743 the names “Mr. and Mrs. Blake” appeared on the register of the Fetter Lane Society, at a time when seventy-two members formed “The Congregation of the Lamb,” a society “within the Church of England in union with the Moravian Brethren.” The Blake couple were perhaps William’s grandparents, James Blake’s parents. And it even may be that the Mr. and Mrs. Parker on the 1743 list were the parents of Blake’s later business partner, James Parker. When William Muir wrote to Margaret Ruth Lowery in 1936, claiming that Blake’s parents attended the Moravian Chapel in Fetter Lane, he may merely have seen the list transcribed by Abraham Reincke and published in 1873:

\[\text{MEMBERS OF "THE FETTER LANE SOCIETY," IN LONDON. 1743.}\]

\begin{tabular}{ll}
\hline
Married Men & Married Women \\
Bell, William & Bell, --- \\
Bennett, --- & Bennett, --- \\
Blake, --- & Blake, --- \\
Bully, --- & Bully, --- \\
Camden, --- & Alters, --- \\
Ewsters, --- & Ewsters, --- \\
Farmer, --- & Ashburn, --- \\
Flood, --- & Brown, (on Swan Alley) \\
Gibbs, --- & Gibbs, --- \\
Gladman, Thomas & Burton, --- \\
Gleddenning, --- & Gray, --- \\
Gray, --- & Gray, --- \\
Harrison, --- & Delamotte, --- \\
Hastlip, --- & Hastlip, --- \\
Hughes, --- & Fish, --- \\
Hughes, --- & Hughes, --- \\
James, --- & Foot, --- \\
Jones, Owen, --- & Foxwell, --- \\
Lewis, --- & Frongnall, --- \\
Man, --- & Man, --- \\
Marshalli, William & Grace, --- \\
Mills, --- & Mills, --- \\
Moore, --- & Harold, --- \\
Morgan, --- & Inks, --- \\
Moss, --- & Lane, --- \\
Needham, --- & Needham, --- \\
Nunn, --- & Nunn, --- \\
Park, --- & Parker, --- \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

On the other hand, Muir may just possibly have been drawing on some family tradition that originated with his great-great-uncle Alexander Tilloch, a friend of Blake’s, or his great-great-aunt Margaret Tilloch, Alexander’s sister.\(^5\)

In June 2001, M. K. Schuchard decided to take William Muir’s claims about the Moravians seriously.\(^6\) Informed by Davies of the existence of a Moravian Church Library and

\[\text{24. Abraham Reincke, A Register of Members of the Moravian Church and of Persons Attached to Said Church in This Country and Abroad between 1727 and 1754. Transcribed from a MS. in the Handwriting of the Rev. Abraham Reincke to be Found in the Archives of the Moravian Church at Bethlehem, PA, and Illustrated with Historical Annotations by W. C. Reichel, Transactions, vol. 1 (Nazareth, PA: Moravian Historical Society, 1873) 294.}\]

\[\text{25. On Alexander Tilloch (1759-1825), journalist and inventor, see Bentley, Blake Books 928-29; Blake Books Supplement (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1995) 660; Blake Records 32, 58.}\]

Conceivably this could be the John Blake, perhaps James Blake's brother or uncle, resident like him at 5 Glasshouse Street in 1743. The letter is typical of such requests for membership in the congregation; its stress on the blood and wounds of Christ is fully in accord with contemporary Moravian spirituality.

All this, of course, is speculation, but of much the greatest importance are the references to a Moravian Church member called Thomas Armitage (already established as the name of Blake's mother’s first husband). Thus, in the Congregation Diary for 1751:

Sat. Sept. 28, 1751. Br. Armitage, being sick, and having long desired it, had the H. Communion administered to him privately. At 1:00 was Sabb[ath] L[ovely] F[east] at Bloomsbury.

Could this really be Catherine Blake’s first husband? Confirmatory data can be found in the Church Book of “The Congregation of the Lamb … as Settled Octr 30 1742. in London,” which contains a tabulated list of members. Thus, we find an entry for and a few pages later (male and female sequences are kept separate in the Church Book):

Catherine Armitage M[arried] S[ister] | [born] Walkingham Nottinghamshire Nov: 21st 1725 | [received into the Congregation] 1750 Nov. 26 | became a Widow & left the Congregation. 13

We thus see that, in 1750-51, the Moravian congregation at Fetter Lane included a young couple, Thomas and Catherine Armitage, and Thomas has the place and approximate date of birth (Rosyon, Yorkshire, 1723 for 1722), the profession (hosier), and the death in November 1751, already established for Catherine Blake's first husband. What is more, the archive includes documents from their hands. Persons wishing to participate fully in the Congregation of the Lamb were en-- me that I had been seeking something else besides him, nor could I then bear the thought of hearing anything else; but of him being Crucified & of his Bleeding wounds, which I Experienced very Sweet & the only food for my Soul then; I am but very poor in my Self & weak and find my Love very cool sometime toward him, for all his done for me so much, but when my Loveing Saviour comes again and kindles that Spark, then I feel I can love him dearly; so he makes me love him or Else I should not love him at all— & I can feel my Saviour, forgive me all my base actions from time to time; for all that my D’ Lords Love is such, as bad as I am I know he Loves me with that ever lasting Love, that nothing shall separate us, as St Paul sais, from Your Unworthy Brother in the Suffering Jesus
Tho’ Armigate

A year later, the Congregation Diary records the death of Thomas Armigate:

23 Nov. 1751. Sabb. L.F. was at Westminster. Today was buried in Bloomsbury Ground the Body of Thomas Armigate a married Br. He was born in the Parish of Royson in Yorkshire, in May 1723, married at London, & was by trade a Hosier. He was receiv’d into the Congregation, Nov. 26 1750, and partook of the H. covenant on his sick bed, Sept. 28 1751. His sickness was a slow Consumption, of which he died last Tuesday Morning. Towards the latter end a little Fretfulness clouded his Love, which he always bore to his nearest Hearts; but the Night before he departed, he desired they would forgive him this, & took a cordial Leave afterwards of his Wife.

The Moravian Church archive also contains a letter of application from Catherine Armigate, expressing the same intense “Blood and Wounds” Moravian spirituality as her husband’s.

My Dear Brethren & Sisters
I have very littell to say of my self for I am a pore strature and full of wants but my Dear Saviour will satisfy them all I should be glad if I could allways lay at the Cross full as I do know thanks be to him last friday at the love feast Our Saviour was pleased to make me Suck his wounds and hug the Cross more then Ever and I trust will more and more till my fraile nature can hould no more at your request I have rit but I am not worthy of the blessing it is desird for I do not Love our Dear Saviour halfe enough but if it is will to bring me among his happy flock in closer connexion I shall be very thankful I would tell you more of my self but itt is nothing thats good so now I will rite of my Saviour that is all Love
Here let me drink for ever drink nor never once depart for what I tast makes me to cry fix at this Spring My heart
Dear Saviour thou has seen how oft

1. Moravian Archive (London), MS. C/36/2/158: Letter ("Nov' the 14th 1750 London") from Thomas Armigate "For Bro: West" to apply to the Congregation of the Lamb. Reproduced with the permission of the Moravian Church Archive and Library.

couraged to make letters of application, formerly read in public at the Fetter Lane Letter Days, but after 1748 reserved for the private perusal of the congregation’s elders. There survive in the Moravian archive letters from both Thomas and Catherine Armigate (illus. 1, 2).

A letter from Thomas Armigate “For Bro: West” seeks admission to the Congregation of the Lamb.

Nov’ the 14th 1750 London
My Dear Brethren
My Dear Saviour has maid me Love you in Such a degree, as I never did Experience before to any Set of of People; and I believe it is his will that I should come amongst you; because he has done it himself, for I could not bear the Doctrine of his Bloody Corps, till; very lately; till non but my D’ Saviour could show me; perfectly, & he over came me so sweetly that I shall never forget, when I only went out of curiosity to hear Bro’ Cennick, which was to be the last Time I thought I wod care in hearing any of the Brethren; & my Jesus Show’d

35. Moravian Archive; MS. C/36/2/158. “Bro’ Cennick” is the popular Moravian preacher and hymnologist, John Cennick (1718-55).

2. Moravian Archive (London), MS. C/36/2/159: Letter (no date, but probably 14 November 1750) from Catherine Armitage to apply to the Congregation of the Lamb. Reproduced with the permission of the Moravian Church Archive and Library.

I've turned away from thee
O let thy work renew to day
Remain eternally
Catherine Armitage
t

The letter, we see, ends with a quotation from a Moravian hymn. Here is irrefutable evidence of Blake’s mother’s religious convictions, her literacy (perhaps, too, showing where her son got his eccentric spelling from), and the intimacy with Moravian hymns that Muir drew our attention to.

The “Walkingham” of the Moravian Church Book where Catherine Wright was born in 1725 is the little Nottinghamshire village of Walkeringham, some twenty-four miles from Cudworth, Yorkshire, where her first husband, Thomas Armitage, was born in 1722. Walkeringham stands on the west bank of the Trent, about one mile from where the ferry crossed to Walkerith, in Lincolnshire. In 1801, the earliest date for which census information is available, the population of the village was 419. It has remained a small community, the population being 859 in 1991. Epworth, where John Wesley was born in 1703, and where John Varley’s father, Richard, originated, is six miles away.

37. Moravian Archive: MS. C/36/2/159. The letter bears no date, but is probably written at the same time as her husband’s, 14 November 1750.

38. This hymn was first published by James Hutton in 1746. It is no. 79 of the 1754 hymnbook. The hymn is also cited in Daniel Benham, Memoirs of James Hutton (London: Hamilton, Adams, 1856) 596.

3. Church of St. Mary Magdalen (15th cent.), Walkeringham, Notts. Photo: Keri Davies.

According to the parish register of the church of St. Mary Magdalen at Walkeringham (illus. 3), Catherine, daughter of Gervase Wright and his wife Mary, was christened 21 November 1725 (illus. 4). (The entries in FamilySearch for Walkeringham parish through a dating error put Catherine’s birth into 1726. Hence she did not show up in the tawdry for a Catherine Wright born before 1725 that Davies recorded in his 1999 paper.) Gervase and Mary Wright had eight children:

Richard, christened 29 April 1715;
Katharin, christened 15 October 1718, died young;
Robert, christened 6 February 1717;
John, christened 1 January 1720;
Elizabeth, christened 30 January, died October 1722;
Elizabeth, christened 6 April 1724;
Catherine, christened 21 November 1725;
Benjamin, christened 23 September 1729.

William Blake now has uncles and an aunt. Most of their names recur for the Blake children. But none of the Blake children are named after their maternal grandfather, Gervase. Had Catherine quarreled with her father? Or is it just that “Gervase” is too much of a “country-bumpkin” name for an upwardly mobile London family? Her mother Mary’s name is also conspicuously absent. Catherine’s brother Benjamin, who married Elizabeth Whitehead in 1754, has children Richard (born 1759), Elizabeth (1763), Catherine (1766), Thomas (1769), and Mary (1772). Again, none of the sons are given their paternal grandfather’s name.41

40. Nottinghamshire Record Office: Parish Register of Walkeringham, Notts.

41. Compare Blake’s concern, in a letter to John Linnell of July 1826, that the Linnells should follow custom and name one son after his maternal grandfather: “The Name of the Child which Certainly ought to be Thomas. after Mrs Linnells Father” (E 789).
The Wrights of Walkingham were yeoman farmers and maltsters. The Archdeaconry wills, now in Nottinghamshire County archives, include those of several members of the family. Benjamin Wright, yeoman, in his will, proven 12 February 1685 O.S. (1686 N.S.), left £5 to the poor of the parish, with a number of legacies and bequests of sheep. Gervase Wright, maltster and yeoman, perhaps Catherine’s grandfather, was comfortably off; the inventory of his estate, 7 October 1700, includes malt worth £120 out of a total value of the estate of £384. The village origins of Blake’s mother suggest the possibility of linking Blake with a surviving peasant culture and not just the emerging urban proletarian one so often assumed.

learn more about her father’s family and the rural milieu in which she grew up.

This present paper, modifying Davies’s own published work (itself corrective of previous scholarship), indicates how much inaccurate or incomplete information abounds about even the most basic details of Blake’s life. The intuitions of William Muir, of Margaret Ruth Lowery, and of Nancy Bogen as to the influence on Blake of Moravian hymnody are now shown to have some basis in fact; without Muir’s assertions, the Moravian archive would have been left unexplored. In a second paper in preparation we shall consider a few of the Blakean topics which now demand attention—his relationship with “heart religion,” his eclectic combination of different strands of culture, the importance of music, his view of childhood and of Jesus. For Blake scholars, the discovery of the Armitage and Blake documents in the Moravian archives at Muswell Hill opens up a new frontier in Blake studies.

42  Blake/An Illustrated Quarterly

Summer 2004
Descendants of Gervase Wright
(grandfather of William Blake)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1. Gervase Wright (b. Abt 1687)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>sp: Mary Dawson (b. Abt 1691; m. 23 Apr 1712)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 2. Richard Wright (c. 29 Apr 1715-Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 2. Robert Wright (c. 6 Feb 1717-Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 2. Katharin Wright (c. 15 Oct 1718-Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire; d. Bef 1725)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 2. John Wright (c. 1 Jan 1720-Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 2. Elizabeth Wright (c. 30 Jan 1722-Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire; buried 8 Oct 1722-Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 2. Elizabeth Wright (c. 6 Apr 1724-Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 2. CATHERINE WRIGHT (c. 21 Nov 1725-Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire; d. 1792)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sp: THOMAS ARMITAGE (b. May 1722-Royston, Yorkshire; m. 14 Dec 1746; d. 19 Nov 1751-London)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sp: James Blake (b. Abt 1723; m. 15 Oct 1752; d. 1784)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. James Blake (b. 10 Jul 1753-Broad Street, Golden Square, Westminster; d. 22 Mar 1827-London)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. John Blake (b. 12 May 1755-Broad Street, Golden Square, Westminster; d. Bef 1759)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. WILLIAM BLAKE (b. 28 Nov 1757-Broad Street, Golden Square, Westminster; d. 12 Aug 1827-London)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sp: Catherine Sophia Boucher (b. 1762; m. 18 Aug 1782; d. 1831)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. John Blake (b. 20 Mar 1760-Broad Street, Golden Square, Westminster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. Robert Blake (b. 19 Jun 1762-Broad Street, Golden Square, Westminster; d. 1787)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. Catherine Elizabeth Blake (b. 7 Jan 1764-Broad Street, Golden Square, Westminster; d. 1841)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>2. Benjamin Wright (c. 23 Sep 1729-Walkeringham, Nottinghamshire)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>sp: Elizabeth Whitehead (c. 2 Dec 1732-Sutton Cum Lound, Nottinghamshire; m. 4 Jul 1754)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. Richard Wright (c. 5 Jul 1759-Sutton Cum Lound, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. Elizabeth Wright (c. 3 Nov 1763-Sutton Cum Lound, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. Catherine Wright (c. 22 Jun 1766-Sutton Cum Lound, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. Thomas Wright (c. 23 Nov 1769-Sutton Cum Lound, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- 3. Mary Wright (c. 19 Feb 1772-Sutton Cum Lound, Nottinghamshire)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

REVIEW

Reviewed by ANDREW LINCOLN

If you don’t know Morton Paley’s work you have probably picked up this copy of _Blake_ by accident. If you are a regular reader there is a fair chance that you know Morton Paley himself—may have heard him lecture, seen him at a conference, or may think of him as a friend. The indefatigable and much-travelled Paley is surely one of the best-known scholars of Romanticism we have. This volume is dedicated to him in honor of “his outstanding contribution to the study of Romanticism,” and aims to build on his groundbreaking work.

In a brisk introduction, Tim Fulford explains that Paley puts millenarianism at the center of English Romanticism, as the focus for the hopes and fears of a turbulent period. Paley shows that repression, industrialization and war made it increasingly hard for writers to imagine the age of peace and happiness that should follow an age of apocalyptic destruction. “Romanticism, on this model, becomes a struggle not just to envision a new age but to retain the capacity for vision at all,” a struggle that produces ambivalence and pathos. This collection of essays aims to build on Paley’s example, offering a “historically contextualized examination of genres, styles and figures in literary and artistic works.” As is often the case in such collections, the volume is actually a mixture of occasional essays and reports of ongoing research. Some items relate closely to the title of the book, while some make only cursory gestures towards it. Some extend well-established lines of enquiry, some break genuinely new ground. But all have something useful to say.

As we might expect, the volume gives much emphasis to the 1790s, but it spreads its attention widely to bring into the foreground works and figures who would once have been barely mentioned in this context. In an illuminating essay on “Cowper’s Ends,” for example, Adam Rounce argues persuasively that Cowper’s projection of endings makes him a more central figure in the end of the eighteenth century than is usually recognized. Rounce finds recurrent millennial and apocalyptic anxieties in Cowper’s work—including “Yardley Oak” and “On the Ice Islands”—shaped by his relationship with the poetry...